The First World War did not just happen; it was planned. It was planned badly and stupidly, but it was planned. The Germans had been projecting the details of their armies' movements for so many years that they had to revise them to keep them up to date. The French also had a master plan to attack Germany, but they did not have a good defensive plan. The British had no plan; they expected to remain neutral. Russia was depending on the three factors that had defeated Napoleon a century before: vast area, inexhaustible manpower, and bitter winter weather. Austria was counting on German armed might to back up any move she made.

All these countries, except England, had various treaties and alliances. None except Germany had enough powerful modern weapons in the hands of highly disciplined troops. The British Navy was the world's biggest, but the Admiralty was watching the growth of German sea power with great apprehension. The British Army was small but professionally well-trained with soldiers who were the best riflemen in Europe. The French Army was large but it did not have the right weapons. The Russian Army was largest of all and could quickly be made even larger, but the men were without modern equipment and there were not enough officers to command a second mustering of troops. The Austrian Army was a poor copy of Germany's.

The weapons that were to count were the 3,500 heavy guns the Germans were ready to use to blast their way through. The French 75s were beautifully engineered but too small to hold off the German advance. All the armies had machine guns, but no one could yet foresee the effect they were to have upon the conduct of the war. No army had enough of them; the Germans had most. Airplanes were few and of little importance. They were to increase repidly in numbers and effectiveness during the next four years. The navies had reached a high state of development, but they were not to be decisive-except for the

Completely new for warfare were radio communication, deadly poison gas, automobiles, effective armored tanks and torpedoes and airborne craft which could be directed toward a target. (Stationary mines and balloons had been used before.)

But military men had little experience with the results these innovations would have on actual conflict. The high commands had 19th century battlefield training to fight a 20th century war. They had to learn their lessons on the battlefield and that was the tragedy which was to cost millions of lives and billions of dollars. Technology had advanced too rapidly for men to understand how it would affect human destiny. A simple pistol was enough to knock the world askew at Sarajevo.

Some Unclaimed Furs To Be Sold in City

Some of these quality furs are uncalled for or unclaimed from storage.

Here is the story of some of these furs: people move away, or for some reason or other do not take their furs. In many instances furriers are "stuck" with these furs.

To this selection, LAT FURS have added many one of a kind furs from their regular stock including a large quantity of fur stoles, capes jackets and coats. These good furs are going to be sold "real cheap." In fact, "practically given away."

Imagine buying a dyed muskrat or dyed squirrel fur for only $15. or $20. Imagine a grey Persian lamb stole for only $35. Many of these furs look like new, but must be labeled "second hand used fur." Fur origin unknown.

If you want to buy a good $15. or $20. fur bargain, don't miss this unusual sale. All prices plus tax.

Last year the sale was a riot. Early shopping is advised for good selections. Doors open at 9 a.m. for this special event. LAY FURS, 326 North Nevada Avenue, Colorado Springs. Phone 633-5069.

Free to the first 25 adult customers each morning! A fur strip, suitable for trimming hats, collars, etc. No purchase necessary. Free offer good Wednesday, Thursday or Fri-Adv.
